THE REMINISCENCES OF CARL SCHURZ

Illustrated with portraits and original drawings. The McClure Company, New York, publishers. Two volumes, $6.

The first volume of what is certainly one of the most important publications of the year 1907, both in respect to authority and major content, covers the period between the years 1829 and 1852.

It begins by telling how Carl Schurz, the son of the scholar of Lillib, a village not far from Cologne, on the banks of the Rhine, in Germany, and of his wife, Marianna Jussen, was born on March 2nd, 1829, in a castle, the ancestral seat of Count Wolf Metternich. This happened, because Carl Schurz's father and mother lived for several years after their marriage with his grandparents, Herbert Jussen and Frau Jussen, who, as farmer-tenants, occupied a part of the seigniorial estate.

The description given by the author of "The Reminiscences" of his grandparents and parents at once attests his remarkable memory of things before the reader's eyes the personality he has in mind, and of investing it with the attributes that lend it distinctiveness and power.

The story of life in the seigniorial castle is full of charm and full of information, imparting the clearest idea of the management of outdoor and domestic affairs, among the higher class of the German nobility, and of people in the early nineteenth century.

Mr. Schurz records the fact that at nine years of age he was considered by his father to have outgrown the school of Lillib, and was sent to one at Bonn. During his lonely weeks to and from this school he, by his father's advice, studied the whole of Klopstock's "Messiah," considered to be an almost impossible feat.

The first play I ever saw, he says, was "Die Schone Genoveva." It was a splendid piece.

At the age of ten Mr. Schurz was sent to school at Cologne. What he relates of his school career in the Cologne Gymnasium is as interesting as the narrative of his childhood in Lillib, and is told with the same clear directness and simplicity that are among his special characteristics in authorship.

The financial reverses of his father, necessitating his withdrawal from the Cologne school, and his entrance as an irregular university student at Bonn, bring him another stage further in his "Reminiscences."

Here at Bonn, during the winter of 1847-1848, he mentions the fact of his making the acquaintance of Professor Gottfried Kinkel and Mrs. Kinkel, and speaks of it as an acquaintance which for my later years became one of the most fruitful consequences.

He describes very vividly the excitement produced among the Bonn University students by the proclamation of the French Republic and the abdication of King Louis Philippe. The revolution which followed in Berlin, and its ending in a victory for the people and the withdrawal of the troops, is pictured at length, and serves as a prelude to the introduction of the author from student into public life.

In the formation at Bonn of party groups after the Berlin revolution in the winter of 1848, Mr. Schurz allied himself to the democrats, and became an assistant to Professor Kinkel in the editorship of the Bonner Zeitung, a local organ for the democrats. His account of his attendance on the student congress which convened in Eisenach during September of 1848 is exceedingly interesting.

Afterwards events crowd thickly in Mr. Schurz's life. He is swept by his sympathies into the ranks of the revolutionists of Baden and of the Palatinate, and after their defeat he becomes a fugitive and escapes by way of Strasburg to Switzerland. At Zurich he forms the acquaintance of Richard Wagner, a notable incident of his winter residence there. From Zurich he travels to Berlin in the furtherance of his attempt to aid in the escape of Kinkel, who has been sentenced to life imprisonment at the Nangard penitentiary in Pomerania. The plan of Kinkel's imprisonment is later changed from Nangard to Spandau.

In Berlin Mr. Schurz first sees the actress Rachel in Racine's "Phedre," and records the impression she makes on him as one of the most overpowering of his life. The succeeding pages of his "Reminiscences," which tell how the efforts made by Mr. Schurz in behalf of Kinkel were successfully by the latter's escape from prison, read like a romance. Mr.

Schurz and Kinkel remain for some time hidden in the suburbs of Bostock until November 8, 1850, when they are taken aboard Captain Niemann's vessel, the Little Anna, and sail for England. Kinkel rejoins his wife in Paris, and the chapters of Schurz's life in Paris and London, varied by a visit to Switzerland, continue to be most interesting, especially on account of the distinguished people with whom he is brought in contact.

On the 6th of July, 1852, the marriage of Carl Schurz takes place in the parish church of Marylebone, London, and in August of 1852 he sails, with his bride, from Portsmouth, England, arriving in New York, as he mentions, on "a bright September morning."

Volume II covers the period of his residence in the United States from 1852 to 1853.

The opening pages record his impressions of New York and Philadelphia, and of Washington, D. C., in the spring of 1854, when Senator Schurz's Nebraska bill "shook the political atmosphere by its introduction."

Of Jefferson Davis, to whom he presented a letter of introduction in Washington, and who was then Secretary of War, Mr. Schurz says: "His slender, tall and erect figure, his spare face, keen eyes and fine forehead, presented the well-known, strong American type. There was in his bearing a dignity which seemed entirely natural and unaffected; that kind of dignity which does not invite familiar approach, but will not render any one uneasy by lofty assumption."

His ideas of others—of Senator Douglas, of Simon P. Chase, of Charles Sumner, Senator Butler, of South Carolina—are most discriminating, and will be read with interest.

The first thing I saw of what he has to say about his first visit to Chicago, and his settlement at Watertown, near Milwaukee.

His noteworthy are the paragraphs of his book which relate to his hearing Jenny Lind, singing while on a visit to London, Eng., in 1854. He declares, in regard to Madame Lind, that "of all the great voices I have heard, none was so charmingly clear and so entrancingly and carelessly to the heart as Jenny Lind's."

In the autumn of 1857 Mr. Schurz was sent as a delegate from Watertown, Wisconsin, to the State Convention, by the Republicans. His first meeting with Abraham Lincoln during the year 1858 is something that the student of American political history will be especially glad to read. Indeed, all that he says of Mr. Lincoln—and he says much—will attract and command attention.

His comments on the political situation just previous to the War Between the States, and to the men who were leaders at that time, are different from anything that has hitherto appeared in print, and which one agrees with Mr. Schurz or not, one can but be impressed by his sincerity of conviction in what he has written.

The latter part of the book refers to Mr. Schurz's career as United States minister to Spain, to his resignation of that position, and his service in the Union Army during 1862-1863, under General Fremont, in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, and afterward under General Sigel.

He gives an account of his experiences in the battle of Cedar Mountain, the second battle of Manassas, and the battle of Chancellorsville.

Here the "Reminiscences" end. Mr. Schurz's children, in a preface note, say they have given the second volume to the press as a gift of their parents. He would undoubtedly have wished to revise it. But we, upon whom the task he left, unfinished has now devolved, believe it best to leave what he wrote as he wrote it.

The reader will endorse their decision. The VAN RENSSLAERS OF OLD MANHATTAN, by Weymer J. Old Mills. From Frederick A. Stokes Company, of New York, through the Bell Book and Stationery Company, of Richmond.

Mr. Mills has done two things: he has painted with color and imagination a picture of Old New York such as we have not had in years, and he has created one of the most charming heroes that ever lived in historic fiction. If you are not captivated (whether you are man or woman) with the quaint manners, whimsies and mad pranks of beautiful India, Van Rensselaer, you are less than human.

As you read the book, the life of the past is yours; when great folk lived near to the Battery, where the guns boomed on the coming of President Washington, and where the high head-dresses and rich broad-gowns rode in sedan chairs on Broadway, and in the great mansions on that cobbled street many a graceful minuet was trod and many a gallant toast drunk. And you may see the tradesfolk as well as the rich, and peep into the garrets of Hanover Square, where brave young Richard Van Rensselaer, of fallen fortunes, served perfumes and fad-lais to the powdered beaux and ladies, and where he first saw his adored one.

In all points of manufacture this is one of the most beautiful books of the year. Mr. Mills's conception of the heroine, in his illustrations, is exactly that of the author of the story. Besides the five beautiful illustrations in color, the book has a title, borders, ornamental end-leaves, etc., designed by Mr. Mills, and in the dainty cover design is set a picture of the heroine. It is a gift nothing could be in more perfect taste.

UNDER THE SOUTHERN CROSS, By Elizabeth Robbins. From Frederick A. Stokes Company, of New York, through the Bell Book and Stationery Company, of Richmond. $1.50.

The story of a sea-trip, in which the sparkle of repartee and the charm of the tropics, the charming girl brightly tells her adventures, on both sea and land, during a journey from San Francisco to New York, by way of Panama. Her problems, how to dispose of a handsome but very young baron, a Peruvian, whose ardent manners are untouched by American conventions. The situation is both piquant and delightful.

Miss Robbins's dialogue is captivating, her heroine is most natural and pleasing, and as for the Baron de Bach—who explains "My father was German, my mother French, my home is in Lima, but I am educated in France—I am cosmopolitan!" he is transferred bodily from life to the pages of the book. He is decidedly a person you would like to know. The book is in this country.

The delicate beauty of Mr. John Rae's work and his perfect conception of the character of the book, a quality which few books of recent years have had. His ornamentation of the book gives it the just touch of distinction. For one who is starting on a journey or returning from one it is a perfect gift—and for the stay-at-home, too.

THE SMUGGLER, By Ella Middleton Tybout. J. B. Lippincott & Co., of Philadelphia, publishers. $1.50.

Miss Tybout's new novel is a bit of the hair-raising things that happen to three American girls upon an island in Canada. It does not deal with smugglers and pirates of the past, but with the modern manner of getting jewels into the hands of the rich, and Uncle Sam's consent. The characters are mightily convincing, and the rapid-acting plot makes the most interesting reader "sit up" until he has devoured the last word.

ELECTRICITY FOR EVERYBODY, By Philip Atkinson, A. M., Ph. D. Century Company, of New York, publishers. $1.50.

This valuable book is for the general reader having no previous knowledge of electricity or kindred sciences. In the simplest form consistent with clearness, fullness and strictness of accuracy, and with a little detail as possible, the author offers a good general knowledge of electrical science in all its principal details. All mathematical demonstrations are omitted, and all unnecessary technicalities avoided, such technical terms as are strictly required being fully explained. The principal electric units and instruments for electrical measurements are described in connection with other matter, to avoid the wearisome detail of a full description in a separate chapter.

Only the latest and most approved apparatus and methods are described, and the new edition brings the work fully up to date and devotes a chapter to wireless telegraphy and its workings.

TURKEY AND THE TURKS, By W. S. Monroe. The L. C. Page Co., of Boston, publishers. $2.00.

Mr. Monroe's book on Turkey is one of the most valuable volumes ever issued on this much discussed country. A life still individual and picturesque. Its street scenes, its bazaars, its amusements, the beauties of its harbors—all the picturesque panorama of the teeming life within its borders—are found an enthusiastic chronicler in Mr. Monroe, who has also not neglected to describe the strange Eastern ways of the Armenians, the Kurds, the shy hill people, and all the curious tribes that are under the rule of the Sultan.

SOUTHERN BUDS AND SONS OF WAR, By Dr. W. H. Henry. Wm. L. Clark Publishing Company of Boston. $1.50.

This book presents a realistic picture of life in Georgia during the closing year of the great struggle between the North and South. The author is a G. A. R. veteran, and the story is full of exciting adventures founded on facts.

Lieutenant Pearson, the dashing cavalry officer, is the hero of the story. "So daring in love and so dauntless in war," was a real character. The dramatic description of the perilous voyage of a frail raft, with two delicately-reared Southern girls and a brave young officer as passengers, down a dark river, and the night encampment on its banks, forms one of the most thrilling chapters in the book.

Alternating with grim pictures of war, so realistic that one reads with quickened pulse and a sudden catching of the breath, are charming descriptions of social life in the hospitable mansions of the South, and of life on the plantations. The fortunes of war and the fortunes of love are so intertwined as to keep the reader in an enjoyable state of suspense until the close.

THE LITTLE CITY OF HOPE, By Marion Crawford. The Macmillan Co., of New York, publishers. $1.50.

Never was a story more thoroughly saturated with the spirit of Christmas than Marion Crawford's "The Little City of Hope," which has just been published. For the first time in years Mr. Crawford has returned to America for his inspiration, and his success proves that his long residence in Italy has not lessened his comprehension of his own country. The hero of his latest book, John Overholt, is American, and through a man who has given up his promising career as a professor of mathematics in order to devote himself to the perfecting of an air motor which he has invented. His is the traditional experience of inventors, and at the time the story opens his finances are at such an ebb that his wife man books, and an exquisite example of the art of the book maker and illustrator. The story, gentle, sweet and tenderly romantic, is saved from the slightest suspicion of insipidity, by an infusion of New England coyness, a combination of fire and demureness that is quite irresistible, and by a spice of worldly wisdom that renders it infinitely charming. The pictures are works of art, and the decorations on page and margin of such high order as to delight the eye with richness, color designs and originality in conception. Nothing more beautiful in the way of a holiday publication has issued from the press than this book.

Hungry As a Bear and Can't Eat

If, When Meal Time Comes, You Suffer from a Yea-Not Kind of Hunger, You're a Dyspeptic.

How to Cure All Stomach Troubles.

A good many people get mad when you tell them they've got dyspepsia, but they don't know that it is a common ailment, and that it can be cured. "I'd love to eat it, but I can't," is one kind of dyspepsia. "I'm hungry, but I can't eat," is another kind. There are thousands of people to-day who hate their meals, and love them the same, and who have to go to bed empty-handed, and everything that goes into their stomachs is turned into acid. That's because they have dyspepsia. And then there are others whose mouths don't water at meal time or at any other time. They sit at the table and go through the motions, only because it's time to eat. These people, too, are dyspeptics.

Every possible kind of stomach trouble can be cured by taking something which will just take right hold of all the food in your stomach and digest it alone without the help of the stomach, and let the stomach take a rest.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do this very thing. They are composed of the most distinctive known science, and are absolutely safe. One ingredient alone of one of these tablets is worth 5,000 grains of food. These tablets do exactly the work that a good, strong, healthy stomach does.

Of the characters of the tablets, all cases of dyspepsia, indigestion, burning or irritation, loss of appetite, bloating, belching, aversion to food, fermentation and gas on the stomach. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will make you feel better, and eat better, and eat better, and make your stomach strong and healthy again. They will make whom he dearly loves, has been compelled to seek a temporary position as a governess. The husband and their thirteen-year-old son are living in the old house on an abandoned Connecticut farm where the inventor has set up his apparatus. Overholt is confident that with a thousand dollars more he would be able to finish the motor and bring fortune back to the family, but the amount seems as far out of his reach as a million. It is the boy, practical, alert, and optimistic, who renews his hope when he is near despair and shows the way to ultimate success. In all their struggles they have looked forward to the time when they might return to their college town, where Overholt had once taught, and this dream of the future takes shape before their eyes when the father discovers that the boy has secretly been constructing a little model of the old village. They call this miniature city "The Little City of Hope," and as Christmas approaches the father becomes as absorbed as the boy in completing it. By a wonderful and yet very natural sequence of events, fortune comes right for the family in the end, and Christmas Day finds them reunited and happy. To tell how this happened would be unfair. Mr. Crawford's story is so full of events, so full of a simplicity and charm that testify eloquently to his mastery of his art. The little book is so admirable in appearance as well as contents, with its cheerful colors, its fine printing, and clever illustrations, that it will doubtless solve the Christmas gift problem for a great many people.

THE MUSIC LOVER, By Henry Van Dyke. Moffat, Yard & Co., of New York, publishers. $1.00.

Sigismund de Ivanowski has drawn the frontispiece in color for this delectable little book. It is a book in covers of blue and gold, and its picture shows the "Music Lover" in his favorite seat where the curve of the balcony reaches its outermost point, surrendering himself to the very best of delight of hearing that the vast hall contained.

And the Music Lover, looking down from his lofty place upon the orchestra, is a picture of a man so limited, orderly, certain and obedient, thinks to himself: "There are many stories running along underneath this music, some of them just begun, some long since dead, some never to find a true completion; little stories of many lands, humorous and pathetic, droll and capricious legends, vivid romances, serious tales of patience and devotion."

And out of these stories, because they are human, has come the humanity of the players; the thing which makes it possible for them to feel this music, and to play it, not as a machine would play, grinding it out with dead monotony. But with all the color and passion of life itself.

First Shave in Forty-Seven Years. Vowing in 1860 that he would not shave until he was eighty years if Stephen A. Douglas, in that year, was not elected President of the United States, John Carmichael came to Philadelphia yesterday and had his forty-seven years' growth of whiskers shaved off.

He is the owner of "Hillcrest," a farm in Barren Hill. After having his whiskers removed, he returned home, and as he tramped across the fields to his house he was espyed by his wife. Not recognizing her husband in the clean-shaven man, she fled indoors in fear, and a dog that guards the place was turned outdoors to chase the unknown man.

The dog did not recognize its master and attacked him, biting him several times in the leg. Finally Mr. Carmichael appealed the animal and later went to the Germantown Hospital, where his wounds were cauterized. Philadelphia Inquirer.
